Margot Clarke of Austin is the current vice-chair of the Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club - a volunteer position with the state chapter of the national environmental organization. She was the Texas state director for the national League of Conservation Voters Education Fund and, more recently, was a staff person for the Lone Star Chapter of the Sierra Club, serving as the Outreach Coordinator.

While working professionally for the Chapter, Margot represented the Sierra Club in its involvement with the umbrella group known as the Alliance for a Clean Texas (ACT) - an informal but broad network of environmental, consumer, civic, and other public interest groups. Her staff work with the Chapter also involved water resources and radioactive waste issues. In addition, Margot is very active politically and was formerly a candidate for the Austin City Council.

Margot will talk about the major environmental issues currently facing Texas, including a look at what environmental and energy issues are likely to arise in the upcoming state legislative session.

President's Message

~ Roe Mackey

Saturday, December 4 the Sun City Democrats will hold its annual Business Meeting, starting at 9:30 for a light breakfast with the meeting starting around 10:00 am. This is an important meeting, for it is the first business meeting within our new Bylaws that were passed in June. At this meeting we will vote for the officers and committee chairs for the next term.

But most important we will review this year. What were our goals and how did we do? We will hear reports from some of the committees of the highlights of the year and possible changes for next year. And finally we will discuss the results of the workshop that we had in June. The workshop was future orientated – that is where do we want to go and how can we get there. I believe there are a number of great ideas that came from the workshop that we can start soon. Also we will hear from you – a time for questions and answers. Mark your Calendar for this important meeting.

When you get this Newsletter the Midterm elections will be almost over. At this time I have no idea how it will turn out. But as President Clinton said, "Plan for the worst and hope for the best." It really does not matter what will happen at the election, whether we will win or lose, it is over. Now is the time to be determined to win in 2012. And I know that we can help achieve victory. However this victory will not come easy. Over the past few years we have had difficulty in getting people to help within our club. Everyone has too much to do, says I am not interested in committee work, and I have other important work to do. Well all is true, but if we do not work to protect our Nation and our Democracy we are in danger of losing both of them. We need people to help our club operate at its maximum capacity. That is having all positions filled, and with committees operating at full strength. To win in 2012 means we start now.

I would like every member of the Sun City Democrats to take a "Pledge to Sun City Democrats" to volunteer in some aspect to help us win in 2012. Just think what would happen if each member agreed to volunteer for 24 additional hours over the next two years (an hour a month) – but 24 times 200 and we have 4800 added hours – we could accomplish much if we all work together.

A Book Review

Faith-Based War: From 9/11 to Catastrophic Success in Iraq (Religion and Violence)

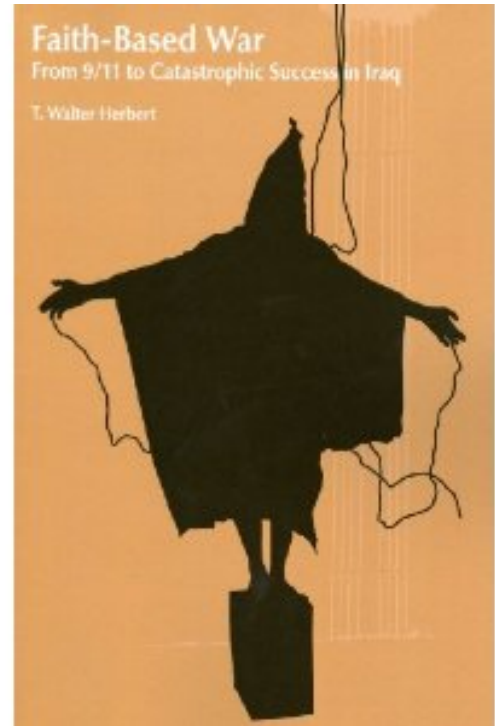

~ T. Walter Herbert

Product Description: Amazon.com

The Bush administration was prompted to invade Iraq by a religious vision that blinded them to the realities of the struggle against terror, and propelled them into moral and political catastrophe. The propaganda campaign that promoted the war, the choice of a self-defeating "Shock and Awe" invasion, and the expanded torture program bear witness to a faith-based policy that violated democratic ideals and perverted religious truth. The White House embraced a version of Christian nationalism in which the president serves as the agent of God's of wrath to punish evildoers, in keeping with a tradition that descends from the Massachusetts Bay Puritans, who considered themselves a "chosen people" occupying a "promised land." As native peoples resisted Puritan encroachment at the frontiers of expansion, they were marked as devils incarnate, fit for total destruction. A modern version of this imperialist vision was invoked on 9/11, when the social and political conditions giving rise to the terrorist atrocity were forgotten, and sanctimonious wrath against evildoers ruled the White House response. At the heart of this religious mythology stands the "frontier hero," who takes action when the "not chosen" strike back against the advance guard of the "chosen." In order to defeat the forces of evil, this cowboy champion of civilization employs savage means: he violates human law in the name of establishing God's law. The Bush administration, acting out this fantasy, claimed the right to engage in illegal surveillance and torture, and invented specious excuses for toppling a government it conceived to be "evil." The classic mythology of the American frontier allowed Christian militarists in the Religious Right of the Republican party to make common cause with broad sectors of the American public. They achieved predominant influence in the Bush White House, and in the future will seek to regain control over U.S. foreign policy. In Bush years, the government of the United States sought to play God, and this perversion of religious truth yielded abhorrent results. Faith-Based War discusses the analogy between the U.S. torture program and the Roman practice of crucifixion, to which Jesus fell victim, affirming that sacred authority resides in the targets of religiously-sanctioned violence, not in those who wield it.

About the Author:

T. Walter Herbert teaches American literature and culture at Southwestern University in Georgetown, Texas, and has published extensively on issues of religion, cultural imperialism, and sexual politics, especially in the work of Herman Melville and Nathaniel Hawthorne. His most recent book is Sexual Violence and American Manhood.

Sylvia Dickey Smith, author of Sidra Smart mystery series:

This well-researched, thought-provoking book is timely and a must read for every American, especially those who think the world hates us and God is on our side. So often, we, as Americans stick our heads in the sand and think the whole world should be just like us. It is time we took a closer look at ourselves and at our national and religious leaders. Instead of feeling like we have all the answers, it is time we started asking more questions. Dr. Herbert does an excellent job of doing just that. Vital reading for a vital critical time in our world.

William M. Polk, Cambridge, MA:

Herbert presents an important and perceptive analysis of the theology and the American mythology behind the justification for recent military operations. His insights and writing remind me of Reinhold Niebuhr's The Irony of American History and his other Cold War and Vietnam commentary.

Where is the Morality?

~ Charles Foreman

... aka @42bkdodgr, a
Twitter friend from Nevada.
Posted on The Political Carnival, 10-06-2010

For several years we have listened to the Republican Party, especially the Right Wing and the religious right of the party, say they are the real Americans, the real patriots and the party of moral values.

When you hear what some of Republican candidates running for Congress and their party leaders are saying, you begin to wonder, where is the morality of the Republican Party?

Republican candidates Sharron Angle (Sen. Nevada), Chris O'Donnell (Sen. Delaware), Joe Miller (Sen. Alaska), Linda McMahon (Sen. Connecticut), Ken Buck (Sen. Colorado), Jim DeMint (Sen. South Carolina), Rand Paul (Sen. Kentucky) have all said they favor one or more of the following:

- * Privatize Social Security
- * Privatize the Veterans Administration
- * Cuts in Medicare and Medicaid programs
- * Lowering the federal minimum wage (I believe they really mean doing away with minimum wage)
- * Unemployment insurance is unconstitutional or not extend UI
- * Repeal the Health Care bill.
- * Repeal the Financial Reform bill.
- * Repeal of Roe v Wade; and no abortion allowed due to rape or incest.

All of these programs help and protect Americans, yet these same candidates support the extension of the tax cuts for the rich. If nothing else, this shows who these candidates and the Republican Party truly represent and it's not the common man. Where is these candidates' morality?

You have Newt Gingrich promoting that the GOP highlight the increase in number of Americans receiving food stamps during the Obama administration. This argument is nothing more than a "class warfare" issue remark. I guess he doesn't feel that Americans who have lost their jobs, seen their savings depleted during this country's worse recession, would need some assistance for their families' basic needs. Where is his morality?

The topper of all remarks is Jim DeMint saying gays and unwed single moms involved in a sexual relationship should not be allowed to teach in the public schools.

He makes no mention about what should be done with a male teacher who is an unwed single father, or what the consequences should be if a male teacher is the reason for a teacher being an unwed single mom. He treats gays and women as second class citizens; such thinking is no different than the viewpoints of the Taliban.

Imagine if all the things mentioned above came to fruition, and the following scenario happened:

A teacher who is raped would be required to have the baby, but would lose her job, because she is unwed mother. Now out of work, she wouldn't be able to collect unemployment insurance, have access to Medicaid, or able to afford health care and probably would have to take a low paying job with no minimum wage coverage.

Sounds ridiculous, but this is the world that could possibly come about if the Republican Party and right wing were in control of our federal and state governments for several years.

I keep hearing conservatives and teabaggers saying they want their country back. Well, the country they will get back, without the above programs, will be the soup kitchens of the 1930s. Maybe when that happens, they will wake up to what they have lost.

So I ask, where is the morality of the Republican Party?

The Secret Big-Money Takeover of America

~ Robert Reich, Former Secretary of Labor; Professor at Berkeley; Author, Aftershock: The Next Economy and America's Future
Posted on Huffington Post, 10-07-2010

Not only is income and wealth in America more concentrated in fewer hands than it's been in 80 years, but those hands are buying our democracy as never before -- and they're doing it behind closed doors.

Hundreds of millions of secret dollars are pouring into congressional and state races in this election cycle. The Koch brothers (whose personal fortunes grew by $5 billion last year) appear to be behind some of it, Karl Rove has rounded up other multimillionaires to fund right-wing candidates, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce is funneling corporate dollars from around the world into congressional races, and Rupert Murdoch is evidently spending heavily.

No one knows for sure where this flood of money is coming from because it's all secret.

But you can safely assume its purpose is not to help America's stranded middle class, working class, and poor. It's to pad the nests of the rich, stop all reform, and deregulate big corporations and Wall Street -- already more powerful than since the late 19th century when the lackeys of robber barons literally deposited sacks of cash on the desks of friendly legislators.

Credit the Supreme Court's grotesque decision in Citizens United vs. the Federal Election Commission, which opened the floodgates. (Even though 8 of 9 members of the Court also held disclosure laws constitutional, the decision invited the creation of shadowy "nonprofits" that don't have to reveal anything.)

According to FEC data, only 32 percent of groups paying for election ads are disclosing the names of their donors. By comparison, in the 2006 midterm, 97 percent disclosed; in 2008, almost half disclosed.

Last week, when the Senate considered a bill to force such disclosure, every single Republican voted against it -- thereby revealing the GOP's true colors, and presumed benefactors. (To understand how far the GOP has come, nearly ten years ago campaign disclosure was supported by 48 of 54 Republican senators.)

Maybe the Disclose Bill can get passed in lame-duck session. Maybe the IRS will make sure Karl Rove's and other supposed nonprofits aren't sham political units. Maybe pigs will learn to fly.

In the meantime we face an election that marks an even sharper turn toward plutocratic capitalism than before -- a government by and for the rich and big corporations -- and away from democratic capitalism.

As income and wealth has moved to the top, so has political power. That's why, for example, it's been impossible to close the absurd tax loophole that allows hedge-fund and private-equity managers to treat much of their income as capital gains, subject to a 15 percent tax (even though they're earning tens or hundreds of millions a year, and the top 15 hedge-fund managers earned an average of $1 billion last year). Why it proved impossible to fund expanded health care by limiting the tax deductions of the very rich. Why it's so difficult even to extend George Bush's tax cuts for the bottom 98 percent of Americans without also extending them for the top 2 percent - even though the top won't spend the money and create jobs, but will blow a $36 billion hole in the federal budget next year.

The good news is average Americans are beginning to understand that when the rich secretly flood our democracy with money, the rest of us drown. Wall Street executives and top CEOs get bailed out while underwater homeowners and jobless workers sink.

A Quinnipiac poll earlier this year found overwhelming support for a millionaire tax.

But what the public wants means nothing if our democracy is secretly corrupted by big money.

Right now we're headed for a perfect storm: An unprecedented concentration of income and wealth at the top, a record amount of secret money flooding our democracy, and a public in the aftershock of the Great Recession becoming increasingly angry and cynical about government. The three are obviously related.

We must act. We need a movement to take back our democracy. (If tea partiers were true to their principles, they'd join it.) As Martin Luther King once said, the greatest tragedy is "not the strident clamor of the bad people, but the appalling silence of the good people."

What can you do?

1. Read Justice Steven's dissent in the Citizens United case, so you're fully informed about the majority's pernicious illogic.
2. Use every opportunity to speak out against this decision, and embarrass and condemn the right-wing Justices who supported it.
3. In this and subsequent elections, back candidates for congress and president who vow to put Justices on the Court who will reverse it.
4. Demand that the IRS enforce the law and pull the plug on Karl Rove and other sham nonprofits.
5. If you have a Republican senator, insist that he or she support the Disclose Act. If they won't, campaign against them.
6. Support public financing of elections.
7. Join an organization like Common Cause, that's committed to doing all this and getting big money out of politics. (Personal note: I'm so outraged at what's happening that I just became chairman of Common Cause.)
8. Send this post to your friends (including any tea partiers you may know).

11 Patriotic Lessons from The Tea Party Guide to American History (History is too important to be left to people who've actually read history books.) ~ Phil N. Molé, Posted on AlterNet, 10-03-2010

NOTE: This is definitely tongue-in-cheek!

Patriots: Tired of textbooks written by liberals who wipe their muddy feet on the American flag and won't be happy until all of our children are vegetarian, atheist, and gay? Then order the new "Tea Party Guide to American History," and save your child from the siren call of socialist homosexuality.

This book will teach your children no more or less than what they need to know to be able to have a defiant, admirably unreflective perspective on their country's history. Things like this:

1. American Prehistory:

In 6,000 BC, the land containing the present-day United States was created, by God. Large masses of land surrounding the current United States were also created, for purposes known only in heaven.

The land containing the United States was designated for a special purpose by God – a future safe haven for the teachings of Jesus, and a place where women shouldn't be able to get abortions and men should never use condoms. However, God's plan is marred when pockets of original sin develop in parts of the northeastern and Midwestern states and in present-day California – these will later become "blue" states.

2. Colonial Days and Witch Trials

Everyone prayed to God at this time and everything was peaceful. There were those witch trials in 1692, but liberals have made too much of that. No one has told the story about how the witches persecuted the other colonists, so that's obvious liberal bias right there. And many more people were killed in Europe in witchcraft persecutions, so really, the fact that we only killed 20 makes us look pretty good. Honestly, nothing to worry about here.

3. Indians, aka "Native Americans"

This is as good of a time as any to address the fact that there were people here before the European settlers arrived, namely, Indians. Some people call them "Native Americans," but that's a contradiction in terms, because America is a land of immigrants – you selfish, unpatriotic Indians.

Revisionist, America-hating liberals try to make it look like there were lots of Indians here who had a complex, vibrant culture, so we'd feel ashamed of ourselves for taking their land and eliminating them. But there totally weren't that many. And according to the earliest documented evidence we've seen of their culture (a John Ford film made in Hollywood in the 1930s), these Indians really don't come off well at all.

Plus, haven't we already paid enough homage to Indian culture? We've named subdivisions of retirement communities after them, and little league and professional sports teams, and we like drinking beer when a sports mascot in an Indian costume dances during halftime. What more do these ungrateful people want?

4. The Revolutionary War and Early Days of the Republic

Series of illustrations: George Washington and the cherry tree, George Washington in battle, and the American flag, flying high against a blue sky background. Take a moment to reflect on these images, and feel warm and good inside. This concludes the lesson on the Revolutionary Era.

The Constitution originally included references to the Virgin Mary and Jesus, but those have been taken out by liberals trying to prove the country is not founded on Christianity. Here's proof: Go right up to the next liberal you see and ask him what he did with the Virgin Mary, and watch his response. That flustered look says it all, doesn't it?

5. Civil War

The War of Yankee Aggression, waged against helpless Southern states who only wanted limited government, states rights, and a nice sip of sweet tea. It wasn't about slavery, and in fact, so-called slaves were better treated than most white males are – a trend that continues today. Slavery was possibly a little racist, in retrospect. But slavery ended with the Civil War, and so did racism.

6. World War II

There was a World War before this, and America won it.

We won this one, too, but liberals keep whining about the fact that so many Japanese Americans were interned in camps. But eye witnesses at the time swear that all of the Japanese who were relocated looked A LOT like the perpetrators of the Pearl Harbor attacks. More disturbingly, they were sometimes overheard speaking a language that did not appear to be English. There were no more Pearl Harbor attacks after the internment – think about that. But don't think about it too long and don't ask any follow-up questions.

7. Civil Rights Movement

OK, so there was a little racism that hung around after slavery ended. But this Martin Luther King guy came along and totally ended it for good. It wasn't through attempts to end legalized discrimination against people of color, like housing discrimination and school segregation, because that was just big government in action, and it was all done wrong. It should've all just been done with speeches, like the kind King gave in "I Have a Dream," which is significant because it influenced Glenn Beck. Also, after white people listened to that speech, they never again gave black people a hard time about anything.

Well, there was the assassination of MLK soon afterward, of course. But since racism ended thanks to MLK, assassin James Earl Ray by definition could NOT have been motivated by racism when he shot MLK. He was just a crazy guy with a gun, and no one else thought remotely like him, anywhere.

And of course, his assassination of King also does NOT show that we need tougher gun control laws in our country. Guns save lives. If King himself had been armed with an AK-47, he'd still be alive today.

8. Feminism and Women's Liberation

Women's Lib paved the way for Michele Bachmann and Sarah Palin, but was otherwise an unmitigated disaster. Across the country, dinners languish uncooked, and undersexed men were forced to cheat or to visit prostitutes, which they never would have done otherwise, because men are awesome. And lots of women begin talking about how they want men to show their "feelings." We'd been TRYING to show you how we felt, but then you passed sexual harassment laws.

A growing number of men find themselves in need of both food and of safe places to objectify women. To satisfy these needs, the restaurant chain Hooters would eventually be established.

9. The Reagan Years

For 8 years, all poverty and violence in the United States end. And Reagan says 'tear down this wall' and the Berlin wall comes down. Millions of sick children are also healed by touching the hem of Reagan's slacks, and the crumbs from Reagan's table miraculously feed millions more. And there was this time that a little boy was cornered by a bear, and the bear was really big and mean and was totally going to eat the boy, but then Reagan swooped down out of nowhere and simply smiled, and the bear stopped being mean and licked the little boy and gave him honey instead.

10. The Clinton Years

George H.W. Bush was president before this, but nothing really happened. Clinton gets a blow job, and this shows the public that this is what is wrong with liberalism. It always, inherently, leads to extra-marital, taxpayer subsidized blow jobs.

11. Obama's Presidency

Barack Hussein Obama is elected president, showing yet again that racism in America has ended.

He proceeds to destroy America with his Kenyan anti-imperialist, Islamophilic socialist agenda. The Constitution is ground into a fine powder and snorted up Obama's nose, and Christ and all of the apostles are punched in the face. In response, the Tea Party movement is born to restore America's purity. This chapter comprises 80% of the total book.

As a companion to the book, we also offer an "I Want My Country Back!" protest kit that includes a stylish slave costume, a DVD of Obama's greatest bloopers, and a pitchfork and torch.

As a tie-in with your students science classes, we also offer a book burning experiment kit. Students can mass books such as "Fahrenheit 451," "Their Eyes Were Watching God," "Brave New World," and "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn" on the enclosed scale, and then burn the books in the included oven. Then, they mass the ashes. The difference in mass before and after the burning is the amount of evil the book contained.

History is too important to be left to people who've read history books to teach. Take our history and our country back, by ordering now!

NOTE: You DID notice my note that this is definitely a tongue-in-cheek article, right?
